Dear Mr. Horton,

Thank you for your email, however we cannot begin processing your request as you have not provided us with enough information to conduct a reasonable search.

The purpose of the FOIA is to provide access to specific documents or records; it does not obligate federal agencies to conduct in-depth research. Requesters are required to reasonably describe the records they seek by providing as much information as possible including the originating agency; dates of records; subject, title, author, recipient; case, file, or reference number(s). Under the FOIA, the first two hours of a search are free of charge per each request and as a matter of policy the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) does not charge search fees for archival records; as such the search time for any request will be limited to only two hours.

Please note, NARA holds millions of records that have been transferred from other Government agencies in the executive branch that are deemed to have enough historical significance for permanent retention. These records are maintained according to the filing system used by the originating agency and they do not ordinarily include a subject or name file index. Records are transferred to us approximately 30-50 years after the close of the records.

It appears you are looking for records that could assist you in proving your identity. We suggest you contact local governments for that information (for example, contact the state or county in which you were born to obtain your birth certificate, etc.).

If you believe records are held by NARA, you can begin your research by searching our catalog found at this link: <https://www.archives.gov/research/catalog>. Additionally, you can contact our reference department at archives2reference@nara.gov who may be able to suggest specific series of records that maybe of interest to you. If you can provide us with more of the above required information, you can write back to specialaccess\_foia@nara.gov with that information and we will conduct a reasonable search.

If you have any other questions, please let us know.

Thank you,
Jessie Hartman

Jessie,

Your response is blatantly and maliciously false. The form was for any records for certification of identity such as matched with fingerprints per agency instructions and with obligation to access generally described for delivery. I have provided all information required on this specifically communicated purposed form DOJ 361. This is neglect of my rights prima facie. It is pursuant to 5 U.S. section 552. Your claims are inconsistent. I need proof of identity records, and by right - this is descriptive enough -- to support application for my birth certificate. This is my intent. Your advise is irrelevant and evasive to neglect the work you are required. SEND RECORDS FOR CERTIFICATE OF IDENTITY! LAWSUIT IF YOU CONTINUE TO DENY AND DEPRIVE.
